2022 FORMING A NEW RELATIONSHIP WITH TRAUMA THROUGH AN INDIGENOUS FOCUSING-ORIENTED THERAPY (IFOT) LENS

ABOUT THE WORKSHOP!

This workshop brings together learners and practitioners to share how Indigenous Focusing-Oriented Therapy (IFOT) can contribute to the health and wellness in Indigenous communities. IFOT has been developed to address complex and intergenerational trauma primarily in the Indigenous Canadian context.

You will have an opportunity to network with fellow learners and practitioners and improve your client care.

IFOT is a clinical and land-based approach that benefits practitioners who work with residential school survivors, those with addictions, and survivors of sexual, physical, and emotional abuse.

ABOUT INDIGENOUS FOCUSING-ORIENTED THERAPY AND COMPLEX TRAUMA TRAINING

The practice of Focusing-Oriented Therapy when working with complex trauma is growing in Canada, the U.S. and across the globe. There are an increasing number of therapists utilizing Indigenous Focusing-Oriented Therapy (IFOT). We are pleased to offer this training to provide the opportunity for you to experience this compassionate, inspiring and effective approach for working with complex trauma.

The practice of psychotherapy is undergoing changes resulting from land-based knowledge, consultation with Elders, and current research in complex trauma and neuroscience which underscores the importance of attachment, emotion, the body and relationship in the healing process. Focusing-Oriented Therapy (FOT) offers well-developed techniques to enable therapists to access body-oriented, implicit processes that researchers are finding key to neural integration and change.

FOT is a body-centered and person-centered approach to healing that was developed four decades ago at the University of Chicago by Dr. Eugene Gendlin. It is a practice that is grounded in a philosophical paradigm Gendlin developed. This process enables therapists and practitioners to guide clients to sense into their bodies and into current-moment experiences to bring about what Focusing founder Gendlin calls 'life-forward' motion. FOT allows the client to be an active participant in their healing and empowers them to determine the pace, direction, and intensity of their journey to health.

Building on this approach, IFOT in Complex Trauma was developed by Shirley Turcotte, a Metis elder and clinical counsellor, over the last 35 years in Canada by integrating an Indigenous based, anti-oppressive, and culturally diverse worldview understanding. This current-day approach and practice of trauma treatment is inclusive of cultural, ethnic and spiritual awareness. It reaches beyond common assumptions that we are all the same regardless of our cultural ancestry and experiences. It connects with the unique diversity of histories and experiences of human beings. It expands the current concepts and understanding of complex trauma.

IFOTCT can be particularly effective in the treatment and healing of complex trauma precipitated by accidents, natural and human-caused disasters, loss, sexual, physical, emotional abuse and/or neglect, institutional abuse, and inter-generational trauma and oppression. IFOTCT teaches specialized skills for working with "speechless trauma" that has become "stuck" at earlier developmental stages and that interferes with functioning satisfactorily in one's present life. These skills facilitate the release of body-held trauma and the integration and metabolization of the experience of mind/body once the release has completed so that life can move forward toward healing and a greater sense of well-being.

"Your body knows the direction of healing and life...If you take time to listen to it through Focusing, it will give you the steps in the right direction."

-Gene Gendlin, 1981
